

Shopping For a Yamaha Rhino 660

The Yamaha Rhino 660 came out in 2004, though a slightly improved and cheaper model came out in 2006. It is a ground-breaking, off road recreational room that has plenty of room for two, plus whatever gear you'd like to stow along for the trip! This ATV features great comfort and options, many of which mimic an actual automotive: brake and gas pedal set up in the normal way, steering wheel, a console mounted in the center, and even a lever style parking brake. The engine is based on a four-stroke, five-valve design that is liquid and oil cooled, and offers excellent power-to-weight ratio. It has an automatic transmission, four wheel drive and an independent four wheel suspension. Easy to read gauges and headrests ensure a convenient and comfortable ride.

Then there's the Yamaha Rhino 700. This ATV was launched in 2008, and brings with it technology that has never been seen in any of the prior Rhino lines. One improvement is the larger engine -- 686cc instead of 600cc. Then there's the safety features: doors and more handholds for passengers.

Both models of Yamaha all terrain vehicles are of exceptional value and quality, and the one you choose to meet your off road needs is up to you. But if you need to find parts, you'll want to choose a website that carries genuine Yamaha products at a good value.

One website you can turn to for Yamaha Rhino 660 parts and Yamaha Rhino 700 parts is Dragonfire Racing at www.dragonfireracing.com. They have a whole section dedicated to parts for these two all terrain vehicles. This section has parts for upping performance, improving racing aspects, or just doing general maintenance upgrades on your Rhino.

Each product on the dragonfireracing.com website shows an enlargeable photo of the product, its price, and a link to a page that shows more information on that particular product. In addition to Yamaha Rhino 660 parts and Yamaha Rhino 700 parts, you'll also find accessories, suspension products, protection and safety products and information, cages and bumpers, and even Rhinos that are for sale.

By using Dragonfire Racing for your purchases, you're choosing to purchase parts that are genuine, designed to fit your vehicle, and come competitively priced.
